

Absent apostrophes (2)

Read the passage. Put in the missing apostrophes.

At last it was the day for our classs outing to Patti Parrs Wonderful World of Plants and Animals. The attractions amazing exhibits were housed in huge greenhouses. In the first greenhouse was a display of magical fungi. One funguss stalk was ten metres high and its canopy was two metres wide; anothers pattern had multi-coloured triangles and circles; but the fungis special magic was to turn their pattern into someones face. One fungus changed its pattern into my mate Bobby Butlers face!

One greenhouses magical display was a set of talking cacti. The cactis voices copied ours – and there were plenty for them to copy. One cactuss voice sounded just like our teachers when she is telling us off.

The amazing animal centres main attraction was a talking ox. We watched the oxs mouth (and the farmers) to make sure it was really the oxs voice. The other oxens skills were different: they could balance coins on their hooves tips or dance to the tune of the farmers fiddle.

As well as mammals, the animal centres collection included fish, such as the ten jumping salmon. The salmons bodies could flick and twist in amazing formations. Even the almost invisible tiny creatures called plankton could do tricks. To see the planktons tricks we watched through microscope viewers.

How did you do?

